Walamoo Digital Frequency Language

1. Introduction

The Walamoo inhabitants communicate using a language called the Digital Frequency Language or DFL. The language consists of patterns made up of 1s and 0s and expressed as sound. Emotions and punctuation are expressed via the frequency of the sound of the patterns when expressed audibly. The language is too complex for humans to translate or speak and as a result, the Walamoo have created a simplified form that allows the translation between DFL and human languages.

For each area of interaction, the Walamoo have created a set of rules to translate the information to DFL. Each set of rules is called a translation matrix. They have created a matrix for the new tax system.
